Suggested Format and Spammy Words to Avoid to get to the Inbox

Aside from following the 60:40 text to image ratio, text font and style matters. Deviating from the standard fonts might stop you from getting to the inbox. Your email font style and size matters. It might necessarily make or break your email deliverability but it would be best not to risk it.

To help you with this, we have compiled a list of standard fonts you can use:

1. Arial
2. Courier New
3. Georgia
4. Helvetica
5. Lucida Sans
6. Tahoma
7. Times New Roman
8. Calibri
9. Public Sans
10. Trebuchet MS

Once you have decided on which font style to go with, the next question would be the size and color. We highly recommend that you use the standard size of 11 or 12. For emphasis, it would be best to Bold or Italicize the words or phrases you want to put emphasis on. You can also play with spacing and bullets to make your email pretty instead of using fancy fonts or bigger fonts.

Now that we are done talking about email fonts, let's talk about spammy words. Email providers have their own set of algorithms and filters that prevent your emails from landing on the inbox once triggered. If using them can't be can't fully avoided it would be best to at least minimize it.

We don't have all the words that all email providers consider as malicious or "spammy".

Here are some additional tips:

1. Don't use all caps for emphasis.
2. It would be best not to use jargon for your first email.
3. Speak your subscribers' language. Don't use words they are not familiar with.
4. Keep your email simple initially.
5. Don't use multiple exclamation marks to add emphasis. One is more than enough.
6. Put an unsubscribe link on your email. This would make it easier for them to unsubscribe. If they don't like your email, chances are, they are not your people. It's always to remove them from your list instead of having them put you in spam.

Keep in mind that this list of spammy words do not include the context of the words in your email. Use the words listed above sparingly and if you can't fully avoid them, make sure to run tests to check if your emails are going through and where they are most likely to land.
